CAREGIVING IN THE NEWS

From: National Alliance for Caregiving | Published: October 2021

Men Are Caregivers, Too, in Democrats' Plan

Compared with its peers, the U.S. has little in the way of family policy, but where it exists, it has mostly treated men and women the same. The Democrats' plan would cement that.

Pete Buttigieg faced criticism from certain conservatives for taking paternity leave with his newborn twins. But his decision to do so showed something distinct about American family policy: It may be flimsy compared with that of many other nations, but it has tended to recognize caregiving as something everyone does, not just mothers.

The Democrats' safety net spending plan would expand and cement this idea. Its family policy proposals — for paid family leave, elder care, child care, public preschool and a child allowance — together define caregiving as a universal need, regardless of gender.

Eldercaring Coordination Helps Put an End to Caregiving Legal Battles

When family members disagree about how best to help an aging loved one, issues can get so heated that the parties take the fight to court. Drawn-out, highly disputed court cases are stressful, expensive and time consuming. The strain already felt by family caregivers becomes overwhelming when they are wrapped up in litigation while simultaneously caring for their loved one.

As an attorney, I see conflicts in caregivers' lives every day: A sibling feels

Confronting Ageism in Health Care: A Conversation for Patients, Caregivers, and Clinicians

What does ageism in health care look like? It can be a thoughtless quip that makes an older person feel diminished. Or an assumption that patients are unable to follow a conversation or make their own decisions. Maybe it occurs when a concern is voiced, then discounted or dismissed.

Ageism is reflected in care strategies that ignore a patient's values and ideas about what constitutes a productive life. Too they're being kept in the dark about Dad's health; someone suspects that the caregiver is spending Mom's money on themselves; or the out-of-state relatives believe (sight unseen) that the caregiver is neglecting their care partner. Tensions boil over and they seek my advice about their legal options. Most people aren't litigious or sue-happy. They want to avoid going to court more than they want to go.

often, attitudes such as “these patients are old and near the end anyway” or “there’s not much we can do to help them” prevail.

Ageism is not new, but the covid pandemic brought it shockingly into view. In its early days, the virus was shrugged off as something of concern mostly to older people, with some arguing they were expendable if the alternative was shutting down the economy. In the grave months that followed, many who died in nursing care were dehumanized in news reports that showed body bags piled outside facilities.

NAC Elevates The Voice of The Nation's Caregivers In a New

Video Campaign

NAC has produced a series of vignettes designed to capture the voice of our nation's caregivers. Included in the RAISE Council's final recommendations to Congress, the vignettes offer a timely, added layer of social support and recognition for family and friends providing unpaid care.

To help support caregivers, NAC supports the implementation of policies that will reinforce those caring for a diverse range of people across different lifespans and experiencing different health conditions.

RESEARCH & RESOURCES

There are 23 million working caregivers in this country.

One in six working Americans provides unpaid care to a family member or friend with a chronic, serious, or disabling health condition. Cancer researcher Shivapriya Ramaswamy counts herself among the privileged minority in this significant, but historically marginalized, group.

Employed by a Fortune 500 pharmaceutical in the Boston Area, Ramaswamy has a steady salary and access to copious caregiver-friendly benefits, among them paid family medical leave, backup elder care, assistance referral services, and flexible work arrangements.

Yet, during the four years that Ramaswamy lived with and cared for both her aging parents, she made little use of what was on offer. "It took time I didn't have to go over what was available... and going to HR for help felt too public and impersonal," she says. Though she desperately wanted a more flexible schedule, she never considered asking. "I had colleagues who worked some days from home.

"I'd find myself staring at my computer screen, unable to think at work, partially because I was exhausted and partly because I was so worried about what was going on at home."

They were seen as less committed," she says. "I couldn't afford that stigma."

So Ramaswamy—like many of the 23 million working caregivers in this country—stretched herself until she nearly snapped. "I'd find myself staring at my computer screen, unable to think at work, partially because I was exhausted and partly because I was so worried about what was going on at home," she says. "I know that I brought some of this on myself, but the truth is I didn't feel comfortable discussing my caregiving issues at work and never thought of my employer as a solution to my problems."

Ramaswamy is, indeed, among the most privileged working caregivers in this country. Still, her story illustrates many of the issues that have generally stood between caregivers and the

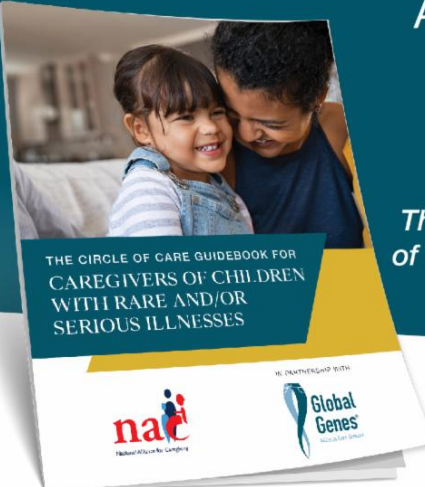

Lessons from the Workplace: Caregiving During COVID-19

In the first article of its new Spotlight series, Social Innovations in Caregiving, the National Alliance for Caregiving details the hardships the COVID-19 crisis magnified for millions of working caregivers and explores the mismatch between what family caregivers need to meet the demands of working while caregiving and what benefits and supports employers offer. "The pandemic has exposed the reality that working Americans must too often choose between caring for loved ones and holding onto their jobs," says Grace Whiting,

President, and CEO of NAC.

Offering potential solutions on how employers can address this mismatch, NAC advances recommendations for workplace policies and practices that employers can provide to caregivers. These recommendations include flextime, compressed workweeks, and public policy strategies to help reinforce workplace solutions such as redefined paid leave criteria.

IN PARTNERSHIP WITH

  MADE POSSIBLE WITH SUPPORT BY:

NAC's Circle of Care Guidebook for Caregivers of Children with Rare and/or Serious Illnesses

The National Alliance for Caregiving recently produced The Circle of Care Guidebook for Caregivers of Children with Rare and/or Serious Illnesses, a new resource designed in partnership with Global Genes and with support by Mallinckrodt Pharmaceuticals to provide caregivers with the support, services and specialized information they need to care for a child with a rare and/or serious illness. This guidebook offers an extensive list of resources to help a caregiver in any situation throughout the entirety of their journey as a rare disease caregiver, compiled by those in the rare disease space and caregivers themselves. This list is supplemented by the specialized information needed in order to care for a child with a rare and/or serious illness. If you or someone you know cares for a child living with a rare and/or serious illness, make sure to check out the guidebook at the link below.

You'll learn about:

- The process of getting an accurate diagnosis for a rare and/or serious illness;
- Genetic testing, clinical trials and support groups that can help;
- Information on treatment and care coordination with specialized teams;
- Understanding the cost of care and treatment;
- Advocating for your child, their care and in their disease space;
- Empowering your child to manage their rare and/or serious illness through all aspects of their life, including when they become an adult; and
- Caring for yourself and your family.

There is also an appendix with a comprehensive list of online resources, supports and services for caregivers, the child living with the rare and/or serious illness, and his or her family that are referenced throughout the guidebook.

What's Public Health Got To Do With... Family Caregiving?

Trust for America's Health (TFAH) has published a blog, "What's Public Health Got To Do With... Family Caregiving?," to launch it's new monthly blog series on Age-Friendly Public Health Systems. This series is designed to stir up conversation, generate interest, and challenge healthy aging stakeholders to engage more deeply in age-friendly public health issues.

Author of this month's blog on "What's Public Health Got To Do With... Family Caregiving?," Megan Wolfe, TFAH's Senior Policy Development Manager, outlines five potential roles for public health departments to support caregivers, organized according to TFAH's AFPHS 5Cs Framework. The roles include collecting and disseminating data, coordinating existing supports and services, connecting and convening multiple sectors, communicating, and complementing existing supports.

Report: The United States Should Recognize and Support Caregiving Youth

In the United States, more than 5.4 million children and adolescents under age 18 provide care for family members who are aging or have chronic illness, disability, or other health conditions that require assistance.

In this policy study published in the Society for Research in Child Development's Social Policy Report, the authors describe youth's care for the family and highlight the increasing prevalence, global challenges, and uneven successes of measurement and categorization. They briefly summarize research on how caregiving affects youth's academic, social, and emotional well-being. Next, they present novel, emerging evidence from the public school-based 2019 Youth Risk Behavior Survey for the State of Florida, which suggests that as many as 24 percent of middle school students and 16 percent of high school students provide at least some care to the family on a regular basis. Drawing on this evidence, the authors' discuss targeted social programs which have been shown to promote the well-being of caregiving youth outside of the United States, as well as a 13-year-old school-based intervention in The School District of Palm Beach County, Florida.

The report concludes with specific recommendations for a path toward recognizing and supporting caregiving youth via policy and practice in the United States. Its aim is to increase the awareness and feasibility of identifying and supporting caregiving youth and their families via government-organized data collection and targeted social policies.
